DUBTING HER HEART-THROBS

le Has Plain Words, Too, for the Papa Cammerer.

The last round and wind-up in the gal battle between Dan Dougherty, the iver-curled champion of blighted affecons, personified in the thirty-year-old ena Cammerer, who, according to the rench rule that "a woman is as d as she looks," should not be than twenty-three, and Col. Rob-G Ingersoll the champion of guided love in the person of Herr nenz Muller, who is on the verge of orning before Justice Ingraham, referee, d an audience limited only by the ca-Col. Ingersoil read the deposition of rs. Erb, taken in her sick-room. Mrs. b is a daughter of Mrs. Richter, at

Mrs. Erb testified that Miss Cammerer aid marked attention to Mr. Muller, of nose wealth and insane wife she had en told, and that at dinner the pretty ailadelphian drew from Muller himself story of his wife's affliction; that she ve him a bouquet, and in his absence equently asked about him, when he ould call at Mrs. Richter's again, and e like.

Hicher, Mr. Miller and three of rour others spoken. The climax of the deposition was in the statement that when, after Christmas, 885. Miss Cammerer told Mrs. Erb that he was engaged to be married to hir. Culler, the marriage to take place as soon is he should obtain a divorce from insife, Mrs. Erb tried to shame her out of nch an engagement, and showed her a lipping from a German newspaper's correspondence column. It was an answer? "C. M.," to the effect that no divorce suid be obtained by a husband in New prk or New Jersey because of the innity of the wife.

"You wouldn't marry Mr. Muller if were not rich?" said Mrs. Erb to the retry Lena.

"Umph!" ejaculated Miss Cammerer in swer, adding naively; "Do you think would take an old man when I could get young one? We shall be married as on as he gets a divorce."

Miss Lena tossed her shapely head, here as sparkled, and her aspirated nose raned up disdainfully during the reading of Mrs. Erb's testimony, and she octained; whispered to Mr. Doughery. That's a big story! I never did."

Then she took the stand herself in related of Herr Muller's story, Mrs. Erb's de that of everybody else.

She emphatically denied nearly every stement of the witnesses for the defense d when Lawyer Lewis asked." Now, liss Cammerer, did you consider with f. Muller a contract whereby you were live with him till his wife died and ben marry him?" she drew up her face is a most bewitchingly horrified amile dexclaimed:

"Why, Mr. Lewis, do you believe any not thing?"

Of course Mr. Lewis didn't, and then be Quaker City girt denied it explicitly to the jury. The climax of the deposition was in all virtues—the love of truth.

Commissioner MacLeau offered the following:

'Wast tcreditable to her any more than to him?

'The greatest sophistry of love is desire.

'Muller said, from his desire: 'Wait till my wife dies, living with me, and then I will marry you.

'That was bad. I don't defend it.

'Mr. Lewis and Mary Ann Evans, known to the world as George Ellot, the greatest novelist the human race over produced. lived under inst such an agreement for years because Lewis, having once forgiven and taken back to his bosom his faithless wife, could not free himself again when she ran away with another man. He could got no divorce, so he and George Ellot did the next thing.

'It was a bad shing, but which commends itself to the innocent heart? Muller's plan of copartnership with this young woman until his jusane wife should die and marriage afterward, or the plan of this young woman and her father to have Muller blacken the name of his afflicted wife, obtain a divorce by perjury and then go through the form of marriage?

'There's a light in this case. I sin't going

Prince Amadeo was King of Spain from Dec. 4, 1870, to Feb. 11, 1873.

He was brought before the public again in 1888 by his marriage to the Princes Lettita Bonaparte.

The Bonapartists have been hopeful that Prince Amadeo would live to succeed Humbert on the Italian ithrone, on account of the indifferent health of the Crown Prince, Victor Emmanuel.

Then a Bonapartist princess would become the Queen and the family be once more raval.

He read a letter from Woods offering to give a statement which would clear him from the charge of consection with the fracis.

He said he did not think a letter from Woods would carry much weight, and refused the statement or any communication from Woods.

Mr. Foraker became somewhat heated during this testimony and alluded to Woods as a forger and scoundrel.

He concluded by saying: "There was bothing connected with this thing that all the world cannot know, and I am here to meet all charges."

On cross-examination, Mr. Foraker said.
